PREFACE.

THE Betting Book of White's, now first printed, dates only from the year 1743, the original book having perished in the fire of 1733, with the rest of the early records of the "Old Club." The book, as printed, is a verbatim copy of the manuscript as it exists to-day, with the exception of some few wagers omitted on account of their indelicacy, and of some others which are illegible. These omissions are all noted at the places where they occur, and beyond this the book has not been edited.

From the appearance of the manuscript, it would seem that the wagers were entered in the early books in a very irregular manner; the book has from time to time been much mutilated and defaced, and in rebinding the proper order of dates of many of the entries has not been regarded. This will account for the gaps that occur, notably at the end of last century, and for the groups of wagers printed out of their place, between pp. 40 and 53, and elsewhere.

Notwithstanding these deficiencies in the text, it is believed that the Betting Book as it stands will be found to form an interesting commentary on some of the events of the last hundred and fifty years, and it is with a view to preserving this record of the opinion of past generations of members of White's on the events of their own days, that the book has been put into type.
